THE SINGULAR®
PATAGONIA
Puerto Bories Hotel

HISTORY

The hotel is located in the converted "Frigorífico Puerto Bories", a post-Victorian cold-storage plant built in 1915. This industrial complex was originally built to process and export frozen meat to Europe. The sheep came from all over Patagonia. The factory was in operation for 70 years, generating work and contributing to the development of the region. After a long period of neglect, the building was restored to its former industrial grandeur and as a result of the meticulous conservation, was declared a National Monument in 1996.

Our owners—whose ancestors were among the pioneers who worked at the plant—had an idea. They wanted to return this building to its former glory, but with a twist: transforming it into the finest and most unique luxury hotel in Patagonia. The Victorian engine room, the tannery, the blacksmith shop... as you walk through the property, you'll find constant reminders of an industrial past. These are reflections of a different time, when risk-takers came to Patagonia to start a new life in an untamed land. This is The Singular's celebration of heritage: bringing Patagonia's proud past back to life.
